Bill No. 15 of 1992

EMPLOYMENT (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1992

(Published on 1st May, 1992)

MEMORANDUM

A draft of the above Bill, which it is proposed to present to the National Assembly, is set out below.

One object of the Bill is to anticipate the setting up of an industrial court under the Trade Disputes Act, and to remove the powers of the Commissioner of Labour and Labour Officers to settle disputes with regard to dismissals under the Employment Act. They will continue to exercise powers of conciliation in respect of this and other labour matters, but binding decisions will in future be made by the industrial court headed by a person with judicial experience or qualifications.

The Bill also seeks to make a number of other amendments to the existing Employment Act, some of them for the purpose of clarification, or to facilitate implementation of the terms of the Act, and some of a more substantive nature.

Clause 6 of the Bill provides a definition of the term "serious misconduct" in respect of the termination of a contract of employment without notice. And clause 7 clarifies the position with regard to the payment of severance benefit on termination of a contract other than for serious misconduct, with the rate of the benefit to be prescribed, and where there is no entitlement to the payment of a gratuity or pension on or after the date of termination.

The Bill seeks to permit rather more flexibility in the normal hours of work of employees, within limits, but without sacrificing the employees' rights to appropriate periods of rest or leisure. It also seeks to clarify the rights of employees with regard to leave with pay, and to permit employees to opt for cash in lieu of leave not taken, in some circumstances.

The deletion of section 103 of the Act will mean that contractors will no longer be required to register with the Commissioner. The Bill seeks to remove the restriction on the employment of females on night work or on work underground. It also seeks to remove section 119 of the Act which provides that a female employee forfeits her right to maternity allowance if she fails to give notice of her confinement, though retaining such forfeiture where she works for another employer during her absence on maternity leave.
