URANIUM DEPOSITS

DISCOVERY AND EXPLORATION

IN ORDER to encourage the discovery and exploration of uranium deposits in Kenya, Uganda, Tanganyika, Swaziland and British Guiana, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authorities announced in September 1957 that they were ready to buy annually in these territories chemical concentrates containing up to 100 tons of uranium oxide. Contracts were to be offered covering a ten year period from coming into production of mine provided the end date of period did not extend beyond 1972. The prices offered were to be reasonable in the light of world conditions at the time having regard to the principle on which prices of uranium have been negotiated elsewhere.

After two and a half years of search this offer has produced no response in any of the five territories concerned. In the meantime there has been a decisive change in balance of supply and demand for uranium and uranium industries throughout the world will be capable of producing far more uranium than is required. There is no prospect of new mines being required and if large quantities of uranium were to be offered it can only be assumed that they would command in the light of world conditions at the time only minimal and uneconomic prices.

In the light of this situation the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authorities and Governments concerned have reviewed the position and as a result the Authority's offer to buy concentrate has been withdrawn.
