Initially courses will be offered leading to a B. Sc. degree in meteorology and it is planned to introduce later courses to provide M. Sc. and higher degrees in meteorology. The training will be provided by the Institute in association with the University of West Indies in Barbados.

UNDP assistance to this project will include the services of a senior lecturer-cum-Project Manager and two other lecturers, three fellowships for studies abroad in advanced meteorology for the training of counterpart staff, and training aids and equipment.

Sufficient knowledge of the legislation and operation of statutory provident fund schemes. Experience in assisting developing countries in the field of social security would be advantageous.

Background information.—The major objective of the present project is to assist the Social Security Organisation (SOCSO) in increasing its capability and capacity by improving, planning and implementing various social security measures in the country.

The existing social security scheme under the Employees' Social Security Act, 1969, was put into operation in October 1971, in respect of employment injury and in January 1974 in respect of invalidity. The scheme now applies to 21 urban centres and has registered 15,000 establishments with 500,000 employees. The Government has announced its intention to include benefits in the case of sickness, maternity and death of the breadwinner. SOCSO is committed to a policy of rapid expansion of geographical coverage which will add an estimated 60 per cent to its membership within about one year.

There are a number of fundamental problems associated with the social security coverage of farmers and fishermen, which presently prevent their inclusion in the social security scheme. SOCSO is to undertake comprehensive studies in depth of the conditions of farmers and fishermen in order to establish a factual framework for future decisions on the social security protection of these workers. As an immediate measure, SOCSO is to make rural areas a prime objective in its expansion programmes so as to cover a eligible establishments and employees without delay.

It is also engaged upon an extensive internal reorganisation of the social security institution, including basic planning for the computerisation of the main administrative processes.

In addition to the proposed pension scheme which is to follow invalidity pensions, the Government is examining the possibility of introducing a comprehensive pension scheme which will provide old age pensions, as well as invalidity and survivors' pensions. This will require certain modifications in the existing Employees' Provident Fund Scheme of 1951.
